BEAUTIFUL SCENERY. that were fought and won last fall in An Exhibition of the Scenery at the

Mozart Academy of Music Last Evening. All the scenes complete were delivered over last evening to the Mozart Board of Governors, who assembled at the new Academy of Music with their families and friends. Mr. Toomey, the scenic artist under whose management the paintings were completed, displayed the entire set of scenes, drops, and curtains, previous to which the Mozart Orchestra played Mozart's Overture from the "Magic Flute." The test of the acoustics of the hall seemed to give general satisfaction, though from the fact that the Academy was not filled, its real virtues in this regard for perfect sound could not be brought out. The lighting of the building by means | gone to Baltimore to consult a noted of electric appliances worked seemingly well. The display of scenery gave general satisfaction and delight to lovers of scenic art. The progress in the art of scenepainting has been marked and rapid within the last few years. That which was formerly considered first-class work is now somewhat behind the times. for like all else in this progressive age. there is no stand-still in art in this direction. This improvement is caused chiefly by the fact that the means at hand are more numerous and adequate. Some years ago colors were but few, whilst to-day many new and valuable paints have been added to the gamut of the artist; besides, new modes of evening marched to the manipulation have been formed, the depot and took the train for home. study of nature more close, and hence

The scenic artist labors under so many disadvantages that it seems almost impossible for him to produce work so complete in detail as he does. Being forced to contend with so many drawbacks, he schools himself to take advantage of circumstances which would cause the picture-painter much confusion and make his painting an utter impossibility-that is, painting as he does now upon comparatively small canvasses and using color which changes but little in the drying. The scenic artist, on the other hand, has a canvas which is from necessity very large; hence it is fore-shortened to his eye. While he is painting at one end the other is far from him-almost, somewife. times quite, out of sight. Under any circumstances he sees much of his picture sideways. Another disadvantage is in the dying of his colors, which always dry out several tones lighter or darker than they are put on. These are but a few of his difficulties. The scenery just completed and exhibited last evening at Mozart Hall | present. has caused much interest-not simply from the fact that it was painted for a ociety in which so many of the people of Richmond are interested, but because the work has been executed at the hall itself, where many have had an opportunity of seeing just how the pany I secure the Hardman in preferartists worked. The tirm of Noxon. Albert & Toomey, who executed the work, are artists of high standing, and have put forth their best efforts here. STUDLEY, The interiors or scenes representing | Director Boston Ideal Opera Company drawing-rooms, boudoirs, kitchens, etc ... are models, in some respects, of decoration, brilliant in color and exquisite in finish, whilst the streets are most realistic and the landscapes are beautiful bits of nature. A treat is in store for many who will attend this temple of music. Here the opera and drama can be represented properly mounted, which will enhance their effect; for good scenery has now become indispensable to a proper dramatic effect, and the public has come to look upon the stage as incomplete minus this important ad-

The curtain represents a marble terrace overlooking a Venetian scene, the buildings brightening under a soft sunset sky, some half-hidden in the purple listance, and over all hangs the soft Italian summer mist. The clear water mirrors the beauty of the floating clouds, the many buildings, and towers of Venice. Rich folds of crimson and green plush form a frame for this beautiful picture, and fall in graceful folds on each side of it. The plush is exquisite in texture and wonderfully realistic, so deceiving, in fact, that it seems to be the material itself, shimmering and glowing with that peculiar lustre which plush is so much admired. The heavy gold fringe that trims the drapery is very faithful. It gleams and sparkles and has the lustre of the precious metal itself. In short, the curtain is a master
